

Greg Allen

The sugar cane land that you asked me about was first used by the Makae Sugar Company which was located in Keahia. After it closed the Lihue Plantation Company took over the lands from Anahole to Lihue.

I don't know when these lands were used in sugar cane, I believe it was in the early 1800's. The agriculture practice changed over the years to have better yields to produce sugar.

For my part the company that I worked for was called Hawaiian Sugar Planters' Association, which we did the propagation of new varieties over all the years that I worked and other types of experiments.

Looking back for the 44 years that I worked for our company there has been a number of years we worked in these fields that covers the Waipohia Waihua areas where sugar cane was raised.

To my knowledge for the number of years that we worked in these fields, we never did come across any Heiau or burial grounds in these areas that I know of. If it did exist it most likely is far beyond my time —

Sincerely
